

EVERDAY OUTLAW

BAND BIO

This Lake Tahoe-based five piece has one boot-stompin' foot in traditional 1970's country music and the other firmly planted in the modern outlaw country movement. What began in 2015 with gigs at the local pizza and jazz bars has expanded to fronting nationally touring acts, sold out club shows, and festival appearances. With a traditional honky tonk country line up of acoustic guitar, Telecaster, pedal steel, Fender bass and drums, topped off with haunting vocals and a heavy dose of attitude, Everyday Outlaw is sure to move you to your feet and pull at your heartstrings in the same evening.

Jake Zender's (Momentum) booming baritone vocals are backed by Mark McCay's (Guitar Town) high harmonies and crying pedal steel mixed with Morgan Hargrave's (Forget The Roses) intertwined telecaster lines. The band is driven by Rory Koff's (No Use for A Name) and Mark Henasey's (Sinking Ship) railroading rhythm section.

The Band has recorded with Marty Rifkin on Pedal Steel (Bruce Springsteen, Tom Petty) and Joe Craven (Jerry Garcia, David Grisman).

Everyday Outlaw receives national and international airplay with up to 122,000+ weekly listeners with their hit "This Ain't No Love Song." They have achieved a ranking of #44 on the DRT Global Top 50 Country Airplay Chart, #136 on the DRT Global Top 200 Airplay Chart (all genres), and #54 on DRT Global Top 150 Independent Airplay Chart. They have performed at the Pro Rodeo Series, festivals, casinos, theaters, amphitheaters, as well as numerous club venues, honky tonks, and private events.

Press

"Like a watered down whiskey drink, country music that gets radio play has become a weaker version of itself. Call it Southern pop or tractor rap or maybe just change the dial. Everyday Outlaw give country lovers a reason to tune back in." - Tim Parsons, Tahoe Onstage
